THE VANDERBILT WILL.

In a conversation had with Mr. William H. Vanderbilt yesterday afternoon that gentleman told a Herald reporter that there was no truth, so far as he knew, in the story recently circulated to the effect that Cornelius H. Vanderbilt intended to contest his father's will. He had seen Cornelius in Washington a short time since, and he had said nothing about the will. Vanderbilt is inclined to regard the stories about will contest as sensational inventions. Ever since father died Mr. W. H. Vanderbilt has been daily in receipt of about 100 letters from idlers who want a little of his money. He has no more sympathy with them. Vanderbilt intends to print them in a volume, and allow the world at large to enjoy the fun, if not the estate.

O'Brien, the counsel for Nathaniel Evans, who, it was remembered, was found guilty by a coroner's jury of the murder of John J. Connelley, a police sergeant, was charged with having plotted with a co-defendant, George Thomas J. Point, of Bay Shore, as he lay asleep in bed, made an appointment for a writ of habeas corpus and secured the release of his client from the county jail. He was charged on the ground of his being illegally restrained of his liberty. Judge Gilbert granted the writ, and with having attached with a care him, in Brooklyn, on Monday, the 29th inst.

BUFFALO ROBE THIEVES.

William O'Brien and Francis Carroll, boys, were arraigned at the Tombs Police Court yesterday charged with stealing a buffalo robe valued at $125 from the coach of E. W. Corlis, of No. 66 1/2 Pine street. The culprits were held in $1,000 bail each.

He fell out of a wagon.

When the track walker on the Hempstead branch of the Southern Railroad, a McConnochie Valley Stream on the second day after the murder, his face was scratched. McConnochie said he had been scratched by a man. The first witness to the witness said he remarked to McConnochie that fact of his having a scratched face was suspicious view of the fact that the man was on that place.

A BLOODY SHIRT PRODUCED.

Peter Peterson, who works on the place of P. McConnochie, said he had seen a man on the place about two weeks; after McConnochie left him to Detective Layn a shirt supposed to have been to the prospector, but, though the shirt was produced, it was not identified as having been worn by the man who was on the place. The shirt was found to be blood on the inside of the sleeve, as proved microscopical examination. There is another shirt speak to her politely offering his seat, he will in-vitably be thanked; but, the trouble is, gentlemen do give ladies a chance to thank them, but vacate a and rush for the rear platform, leaving the lady infer they have reached their destination. No lad-in the world are more polite than Americans.

 THANKS FOR HIS SEAT.

appeared in the criminal records of Brooklyn. It was rumored that the prisoner had been on intimate terms with Terrino, the supposed counterfeiter, who was murdered in a mysterious manner in that city 10 years ago. Mrs. Massimino says that she never heard of Terrino's name mentioned in the family, and does not believe that her father was in any way mixed up in that tragedy.
